Mediation

Mediation means, transferring information from one language to another, without translating it word for word.

You should select the relevant content, summarize it and then rephrase it.

Structure

Introduction:

Explain briefly who you are writing to and why.

Main Part:

Summarize the key information in your own words.

Use connecting words (first, then, however, in addition, etc.).

Use the correct tense and style (formal/informal) depending on your text type.

Don't be scared to explain things that only make sense in one culture

Use clear and neutral language

Ending:

Short closing sentence if appropriate.

Text Types

Text type	Features
Blog Entry	-Has a catchy title -Mix of information and opinion -Style: informal / personal tone -Can use first person (I / we) -Tense: flexible (often present)
Letter/E-Mail	-Includes greeting and ending (Dear…, Best regards, etc.) -Personal and direct -Style: semi-formal or informal, depending on recipient -Can use first person (I / we) -Focus on helping or informing someone
Newspaper article	- Has a headline -Starts with introduction / summary -Style: formal -Objective tone, mostly no personal opinion (neutral) -Often written in present tense

Working with idiomatic expressions in Translation/Meditation

-Convey all relevant information

-Keep it short & simple

-Stick to the English sentence structure → Subject, Object, Verb

-understand the idiom → search for an English analogy or translate the meaning

-Rearrange if necessary (maybe change passive to active)

Listening comprehension

-Focus on the exam from the very beginning →listen carefully

-Use the reading time before the audio is played for the first time to identify key words → highlight them

-Underline unclear words that seem important and if you have time look them up in the dictionary

-Do not write down complete sentences. Make your answers as short and precise as possible.

-If you are asked to give a certain amount of items, do not give more, if one of them is wrong you won't get any points

-If you cannot write down answer or are unsure, mark that task so that you can focus on it in the second listening time

Intercultural learning

-Cultural identity Iceberg is a visual representation for:

→Invisible elements (core elements of culture)

→Visible elements (noticeable elements at first glance)

Cultural Expression:

-Everyone sees the world through their own cultural lens → the perspective shaped by their background and experiences.

-heritage: Traditions, beliefs, and customs that are passed down through generations.

→ Culture is not fixed, it changes constantly (e.g. youth culture).

-Most modern societies include people from many cultural backgrounds living together and influencing each other.

-cultural activities like art, music, food, literature, sports, and more all express cultural identity.
