--- Society and Individual ---

Comment

Language

-Argumentative text

-Use Formal register

Introduction

-introduce the topic with a “hook”

→ Question

→ link to quote/text + explain

→ appeal to the readers’ interest

→ bring up an underlying problem

→ example/anecdote

-clear thesis

-provide/cite source material

-give necessary background (short!)

-transition into the main part

Main Part

Use either OREO or PEEL structure for each paragraph.

OREO	PEEL
Opinion - State your argument clearly - Connect it directly to your thesis	Point - Present a clear topic sentence - Focus on one argument per paragraph
Reason - Explain why your Opinion is valid	Evidence - Provide supporting evidence from reliable sources
Evidence/Example - Support your reason with: →facts →statistics →quotes from the text →examples (real-life/hypothetical) - Explain how the evidence proves your Opinion	Explanation - Analyze your Evidence - Show the reader why this evidence supports your point - Discuss consequences, implications, or the larger context.
Opinion (restated) - Summarize the paragraph's key idea - Link back to the thesis - Transition to the next opinion	Link - Summarize the paragraph's key idea - Link back to the thesis - Transition to the next opinion

Conclusion

- Summarize main arguments
- Restate the thesis in a more developed way
- Show what the reader should understand or take away.
- Connect back to the “hook,” quote, or problem from the introduction
- Provide a final thought:
    - → a call to reflection
    - → a broader implication
    - → a prediction
    - → a recommendation (in formal, objective language)

Themes

Society

Society is the system of rules, norms, and expectations that shapes how people behave and interact. It can support individuals by providing structure and opportunities, but it can also restrict them through pressure to conform or social inequality. Institutions such as family, school, and media influence values, behavior, and social roles.

Individual

The individual refers to a person's identity, beliefs, and personal values. People often face challenges when their identity conflicts with social expectations. Themes include self-discovery, independence, personal growth, and the tension between freedom and belonging. Individuals can be influenced, restricted, or empowered by society.

Code-Switching

Code-switching is the practice of changing language, dialect, or style depending on context or audience. It often occurs in multilingual or multicultural environments. People code-switch to fit in socially, express emotions, show identity, or adapt to formal or informal situations. It reflects flexibility and awareness of social norms.

Gender Roles

Gender roles are the socially constructed expectations of how men, women, or non-binary people should behave. Traditional roles can create inequality, limit opportunities, or reinforce stereotypes. Modern discussions focus on equality, diversity, and the freedom to define one's own identity beyond societal expectations.

Tradwives

Tradwives, short for "traditional wives," are women who choose to follow traditional gender roles, often focusing on homemaking, child-rearing, and supporting their husband. This lifestyle emphasizes family, domestic duties, and conservative values. It can be a personal choice reflecting identity, but it is sometimes criticized as reinforcing outdated stereotypes or limiting women's opportunities.
